ISRAELI COURT HEARS U.S. JUDGE CHARGE EICHMANN WANTED TO SHOOT ALL CAPTURED ALLIED AIRMEN OF JEWISH PARENTAGE; CITE CASE HISTORIES OF MEN WHO REFUSED TO KILL IN COLD BLOOD, YET ESCAPED DEATH PENALTY, AGAINST EICHMANN DEFENSE THAT HE HAD TO DEPORT JEWS TO MURDER CAMPS

On a ghastly day in the Adolf Eichmann trial for the murder of six million Jews, the story of Auschwitz was told by people who were there, and horror was piled upon horror all day long in the Jerusalem Court until the minds of spectators were reeling. There was nothing essentially new in the testimony, says Robert S. Bird, of the New York Herald Tribune, but the incidents that were related about life in this biggest and most awful of the German extermination camps fell like merciless hammer blows from the witness stand all day long.

What alone made it bearable was that the witnesses were for the most part surprisingly strong and well-recovered persons — though every one of them had lived amid imminent death for months or years in the hands of their Nazi torture-murderers.

Two of the witnesses were shielded entirely from the public. They had been the victims of medical experiments in sterilization, and they were heard by the tribunal in private. Nothing about them was revealed to newsmen beyond the fact that they were testifying.

Outstanding episodes recounted included the pathetic efforts of children whose parents had gone to the gas chambers to live on under the whippings and starvation of the German guards, and the wholesale extermination of these youngsters. An account by a man who, as a child in Auschwitz, was hitched up like a horse with other children to a cart that carried human bone ashes to be spread by the youngsters over the camp's icy roads.

For two or three days a man rode in a transport to Auschwitz who watched two fellow prisoners shot before his eyes, and who had to make the entire trip with one of the men, dead, tied in the seat beside him, and the other, dying, similarly tied up and slowly bleeding to death.

Cannibalism, shooting squad executions, castration of men prisoners, hangings by the neck and hangings by the feet, these and endless other atrocities, all were recounted, says the New York Herald Tribune. Some of the most unusual glimpses into the Auschwitz camp and its near-by extermination branch of Birkenau were given by the physician who was an inmate-doctor there. He was Dr. Aaron Heilman.

He testified, for example, that it was his experience that when an epidemic disease struck the inmates the Jews from Western Europe tended to seek release in death, but the Jews from Eastern Europe fought to survive. The motivating difference, he said, appeared to be the ardent urge of the Eastern European Jews for revenge against the Nazis, and cited examples to support his theory.

The witness told how he had greatly contributed to prisoner lore on the gasings by an accident of his own. Assigned to disinfect barracks with Zyklon B gas — the same as was used for killing Jews in the gas chambers — he once inhaled from a disinfected blanket so much of the stuff that he fell unconscious.

The doctor said the gas had a faint aroma of burnt almond and he felt no pain whatever when he fell in a coma. The other prisoners were comforted to hear this, he said, for they all expected it would be their eventual end.

This man described the various diseases of the camp, and told how he eventually became himself a muselman, or walking skeleton. He testified that Auschwitz prisoners had two taboos, one against talking about food; and the other against mentioning the crematoria. The food taboo was medically sound, he said, because talk of food caused the gastric juices to flow and made the victim all the hungrier.

The first sign of becoming a muselman, he said, was when the prisoner began talking obsessively about food, says the New York Herald Tribune. Soon after that, he would develop hallucinations, his motions would slow up, and his face, become a mask.

The doctor's final personal torture was a death march as the Allied armies approached. He said that 5,000 persons died in one night when they slept in a mine with ventilation shut off by the guards. Out of a marching column of 25,000 persons, he estimated not more than sixty persons survived.

The same cruelties that were inflicted on the adults were used in the Auschwitz camp for young boys, according to Joseph Kleinman, a Jerusalem carpenter, aged fourteen when he was brought to Auschwitz with his father, mother, brother, and little sister. His parents and sister were separated from him at the railway station and taken to the gas chambers while he and his brother were saved for a labor detail.

For several months, about 1,000 Jewish boys lived in the camp, eating starvation rations, stealing food where they could, beaten almost to death when caught, and constantly guarding their few religious possessions so they could pray and keep Jewish feast days.

He told how one day the boys were marched under a height measuring stick nailed to a post on a field, and how the small and short boys who couldn't touch it were taken to be gassed while the others were spared for work. He testified that he tried to raise his height by filling his oversized shoes with pebbles and rags, but in the end he saved himself by sneaking into a group of boys who had already passed the test.

Yehuda Beken, a well-known Israeli painter, was another witness who was fourteen when he was an inmate in Auschwitz. He testified that he was put in a very unusual part of Auschwitz, a so-called family camp, where the inmates lived together as a family. But only for six months, says the New York Herald Tribune. At the end of that time they were listed for extermination.

The tribunal was greatly interested in his testimony that a Jewish leader had told the inmates of the family camp that a recent visit by Adolf Eichmann did not bode for any good things.

In January, 1945, he testified, he was transferred to Mauthausen death camp in Austria, on a foot march where conditions were so bad that the children envied their parents' death in the gas chamber. The overcrowding at Mauthausen was so bad that people preferred to sleep in the cold outdoors — it was during March, 1945 — than to stay in the huts which were crawling with lice. While he was there, he testified, an air raid resulted in a direct hit on his camp.

"I saw on the following morning people eating human flesh," he said. These were inmates eating the flesh of persons killed in the raid, he explained. He himself was so weak he could not stand up.

When the Americans liberated the camp a little later, he said, he immediately began making drawings of scenes of the Auschwitz camp, says the New York Herald Tribune, and these he brought to court and identified as part of the prosecution's exhibits.

During cross examination of Eichmann he contended that he was a frustrated idealist, denied the alleged murder of a Jewish youth and said he was not responsible for the "death march" of Hungarian Jews from Budapest in 1944, says Homer Bigart in the New York Times. As his cross-examination ended, Eichmann depicted himself as a part-time disciple of the German philosopher Immanuel Kant. He seemed to enjoy a scholarly interlude at the close of the day, when one of the three German-born Israeli judges invited him to discuss Kant's categorical imperative.

The imperative is the principle Kant made the basis of morals and which he stated thus: "Act only on the maxim whereby thou canst at the same time will that it should become a universal law."

Dr. Robert Servatius used a two-hour re-examination in an attempt to repair some damage Attorney General Gideon Hausner had inflicted on the defense image of Eichmann as only a "small cog" in the Nazi genocide apparatus.

Led by the soft-spoken Dr. Servatius, Eichmann said he was never an anti-Semite. "I never saw in the Jew my personal enemy, I never had an unfortunate experience in regard to Jews," he said. There was a period, "unfortunately brief," when he had actually been a "benefactor" of Jews, he contended. This was so, he said, because the emigration he tried to force upon them was preferable to their eventual fate.

Then came the judges' turn for examining Eichmann. Judge Izhak Raveh led off with a series of questions designed to draw out Eichmann's personal beliefs. Judge Raveh asked Eichmann about a statement he had made to the Israeli police about his efforts to "follow the Kantian philosophy."

"I meant by this that at any time and at any moment my way of life should set an example within the framework of the laws," Eichmann replied, says the New York Times. "That is exactly what Kant said."

Judge Raveh said: "But I understand that the imperative principle of Kant was what attracted you here."

"Yes," Eichmann answered.

Judge Raveh then leaned forward on the bench, propped his head on his hands and asked: "Do you wish to say that your activities in deporting Jews correspond to the imperative premises of Kantian philosophy?"

"No, of course not," Eichmann said, warning of a discussion and gesturing with both hands.

"I could not apply the Kantian precepts when my life was under a regime of constraint and compulsion. What I meant was the situation where I could be my own master, where I could follow my own will and the dictates of my conscience, not a situation where I had to bow to the fate which had been imposed upon me, not when I had to live under superior orders."

"Do you wish to say, then, that by blindly complying with superior orders you were acting in accordance with Kant's categorical imperative?" Judge Raveh asked.

Eichmann replied: "Of course the definition of the categorical imperative principle would be rather difficult. In Kant's day superior orders were not as destructive and lethal as later."

Judge Raveh looked puzzled. He wanted to know during exactly what years Eichmann was unable to live according to Kant's principles.

Eichmann replied: "From the time (1934) when I was transferred to Berlin against my will up to the end of the war."

He said he had not read Kant's "Critique of Pure Reason" until the war years, although he had a general idea of Kantian precepts before then.

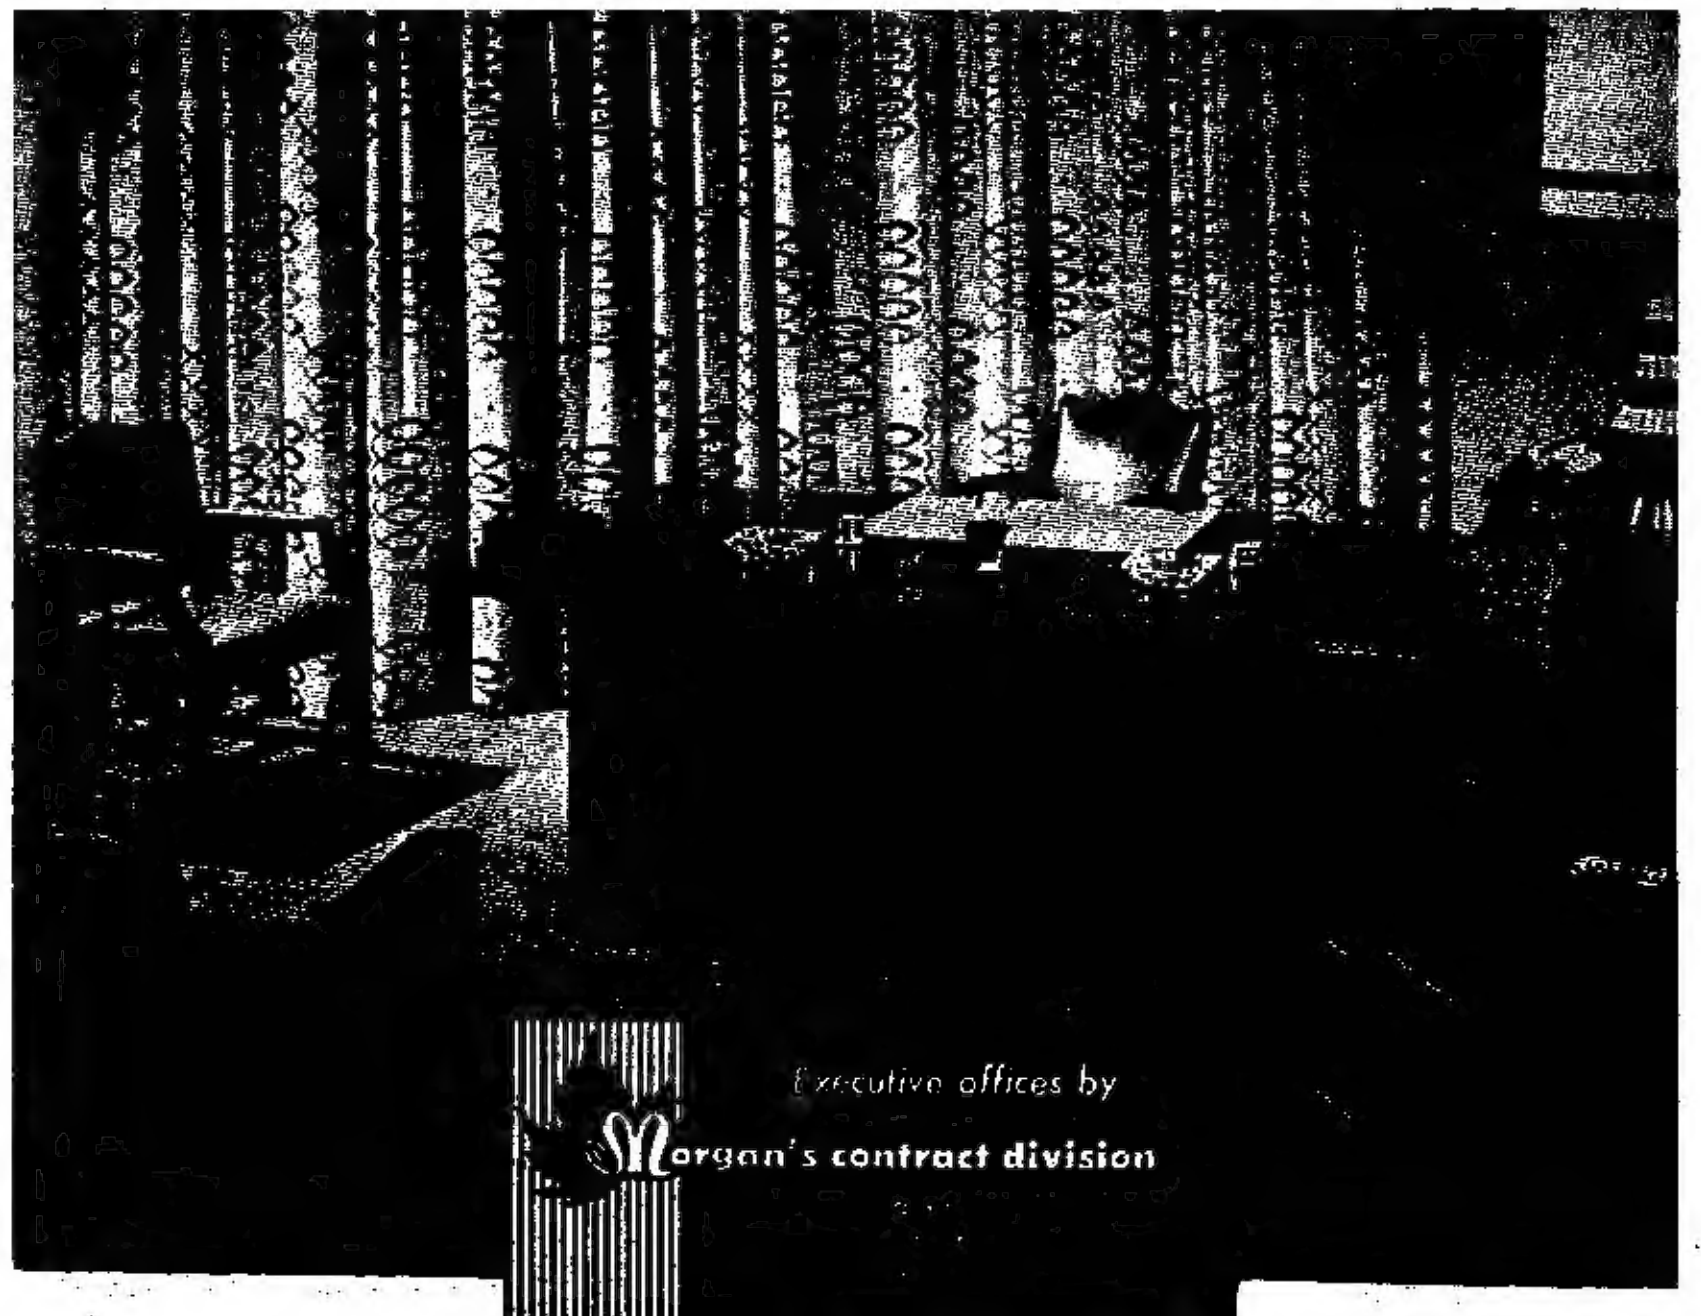

"In a nutshell," Eichmann said, "I suppose Kant's categorical imperative can be summarized as 'be loyal to the laws, be a disciplined person, live an orderly life, do not come into conflict with laws.'"

This was a good philosophy for the "kleiner Mann" (little man), Eichmann said, reports the New York Times, but he added: "In its comprehensive and real sense I have not understood the moral imperative to this day."

A Pennsylvania judge charged that Adolf Eichmann, in the final weeks of World War II, wanted to shoot all captured Allied airmen of Jewish blood. Justice Michael A. Musmanno, of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, was a most dramatic witness. Thin and vigorous, with a profile vaguely reminiscent of George Washington and topped by a white mane, Mr. Musmanno had the courtroom crowd gasping.

Mr. Musmanno, who served as a judge at the Nuremberg war crimes trial, after World War II, was allowed to testify over the prolonged objections of Eichmann's defense counsel, Dr. Robert Servatius. Dr. Servatius protested that the evidence was hearsay and that anyhow Mr. Musmanno was "a publicist."

There was laughter in the court when Dr. Servatius, in his soft Rhineland accent, observed: "Far be it for me to doubt the credibility of a judge, but we are dealing with a publicist who travels about and collects material and publishes it."

The Pittsburgh judge was uncomfortable under a long cross-examination. His most embarrassing moment came at the end of the day when the presiding judge, Moshe Landau, inquired whether Justice Musmanno had mentioned Eichmann in his book, "Ten Days To Die."

Justice Musmanno conceded that the book contained no reference to Eichmann because he had not considered Eichmann important when he wrote it. Most of his testimony was based on information he picked up while gathering material for the book.

At the start of his testimony, Mr. Musmanno, adroitly led by Attorney General Gideon Hausner, the chief prosecutor, seemed a skillful witness, a master of the dramatic pause, says the New York Times. Thus when Mr. Hausner asked at the outset whether the witness had discussed atrocities with Hermann Goering in the Nuremberg prison in 1945, the witness said he had, indeed.

"He (Goering) said he was not aware that the program of Jewish extermination had reached the reported proportions," Mr. Musmanno said. "And the persons responsible for that program were Hitler, Bormann, Goebbels, Heydrich, and . . ."

Here the witness paused for a moment while the spectators leaned forward in breathless expectation. "And Eichmann," Mr. Musmanno added. A collective gasp escaped the audience. Heads swerved to the prisoner's dock, enclosed in bullet-proof glass. But there was no response from the pallid figure inside. Eichmann did not so much as raise an eyebrow.

Justice Musmanno insisted that not only Goering but other Nazi leaders, including Ernst Kaltenbrunner, the security chief; Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop; Hans Frank, Governor of occupied Poland; and the last air force chief of staff, Gen. Karl Kohler, all had told him Eichmann was "the man who headed the program of extermination."

It was General Kohler who told him of Eichmann's final obsession to kill the Jewish airmen, Mr. Musmanno said. Actually no airmen were executed, the witness added, because General Kohler dispersed the Jewish prisoners among thousands of other prisoners where Eichmann could not find them.

Justice Musmanno said General Kohler had been with Hitler in his Berlin bunker during the final weeks of the siege of the German capital. He said that when he interviewed General Kohler concerning Hitler's last days, the former Luftwaffe general "fortuitously" mentioned Eichmann's name.

"I was asking Kohler about Hitler's attitude during the very last days when he must have known he couldn't win the war, when he must have thought about possible capture by the Allies," the Pennsylvania judge said, reports the New York Times. "Kohler replied that Hitler was in a constant rage, fulminating and demanding that all captured Allied fliers should be executed."

The witness testified that General Kohler said he had then appealed to Kaltenbrunner, the chief of the security services, who agreed that Hitler's order should be disobeyed. But Kaltenbrunner warned General Kohler, according to Mr. Musmanno, that Eichmann, who was in charge of the Jewish Affairs Bureau of the Gestapo (security police), would still insist that captured pilots of Jewish blood must be shot.

"Kohler then went to see Eichmann and Eichmann would not budge," said Mr. Musmanno. "Kohler fixed it by scattering pilots of Jewish parentage among the prisoner-of-war camps."

Mr. Musmanno was subjected to intensive cross-examination by Dr. Servatius. Through it all he insisted, often with vehemence, that while his testimony was hearsay it must be true because so many jailed Nazis had told him of Eichmann's power.

Folding his arms across his chest and glaring at the stout West German defense counsel, Mr. Musmanno argued that his narrative had "versimilitude" because the Nazis spontaneously named Eichmann as the main cog in the annihilation machinery, although the obvious scapegoat for them to blame would have been Eichmann's superior Gen. Heinrich Mueller, chief of the Gestapo.

Mr. Musmanno's testimony struck directly at the defense's argument that Eichmann merely followed orders from above and had no power of decision.

Dr. Servatius, in his first real opportunity to demonstrate his ability as a cross-examiner, hammered at the witness. He asked whether all those high Nazi officials, in their interviews with Mr. Musmanno had not been trying to palm off their responsibility on a small official, says the New York Times. He quoted documents to include that the major decisions to annihilate European Jews were taken at a much higher level than Eichmann's modest rank of lieutenant colonel.

"Yes," cried Justice Musmanno with heat, "but the instrumentality was Adolf Eichmann. It was Eichmann who decided in what order, in what countries the Jews were to die."

Mr. Musmanno, apparently irked by Dr. Servatius' description of him as "a publicist," said that he had interviewed more than 100 Nazis immediately after the war when he was assigned by the United States Navy to investigate whether Hitler was really dead.

He said he had questioned all the intimates of Hitler who had survived, including admirals, generals, aides, and orderlies down to Hitler's secretary, barber, butler, and cook.

He also served at three of the Nuremberg war crimes trials, presiding over the case of twenty-one leaders of the Einsatzgruppen, the Nazi operational groups that allegedly worked closely with Eichmann in the slaughter of Jews in German-occupied areas of Eastern Europe.

A surprising number of those people mentioned Eichmann, according to Mr. Musmanno. With a trace of irony, Dr. Servatius asked whether Justice Musmanno, in his judgment on the Einsatzgruppen trial at Nuremberg, had mentioned Eichmann as an alleged instigator of the shootings of hundreds of thousands of Jews.

Mr. Musmanno replied: "I did not mention Eichmann in the judgment. There was no necessity of doing so. He was not on trial." Dr. Servatius said he had understood the witness to say that former Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop had told him that Eichmann had pressed him (von Ribbentrop) to implement the "final solution" of the Jewish problem—that is, annihilation.

"Ribbentrop told me Eichmann influenced Hitler," Mr. Musmanno replied. "I did not accept this. I couldn't conceive of anybody influencing Hitler—it would have been like influencing an erupting volcano."

Dr. Servatius also expressed doubts on Mr. Musmanno's testimony concerning Hans Frank, Nazi Governor of occupied Poland, says the New York Times. Mr. Musmanno said Frank told him that at one time late in the war he sickened of bloodshed and asked Reichsfuehrer Heinrich Himmler

if the slaughter of the Jews could cease.

Himmler recommended that he go to Eichmann, Mr. Musmanno testified, and Frank "talked to Eichmann but couldn't get anywhere with him."

Dr. Servatius recalled that in his thirty-nine-volume diary Hans Frank never mentioned Eichmann. But Mr. Musmanno was ready for this and retorted that Frank had left other things out of his diary as well.

The defense counsel also attacked Mr. Musmanno's contention that some of those he interviewed had refused to take part in atrocities, and yet had escaped retaliation by the Nazis. Part of Eichmann's defense rests on his contention that he would have been shot had he not carried out orders for the deportation of Jews.

Dr. Servatius read part of a Nuremberg judgment declaring that in the Nazi military machine subordinates had no "freedom of choice" and that refusal to obey orders led to drastic punishment. But that was "a general state-of Canada has invited the fourteen members of the United Zionist Council of Canada to join the national executive. Lawrence Freeman is Z.O.C. president. The fourteen represent: The Labor Zionist Movement; Mizrahi-Hapool; Hamizrahi Organization; Zionist

MONTREAL MEETINGS

Revisionist Organization; and the United Labor Zionist Party (Ahdut Avodah). Mr. Freeman, who is also president of the United Zionist Council, stated that the Council unanimously supported a proposal made by him to obtain the necessary agreement for the co-optation to the national executive of the Z.O.C. of the fourteen constituted members of the U.Z.C. who are not Z.O.C. representatives. The Z.O.C. constitution provides that the president, with the approval of the executive board, may add additional members to the board, providing that the number of those elected and appointed shall not exceed one hundred. There were sufficient vacancies on the executive to make possible the co-optation. The Z.O.C. national executive meeting in Toronto gave its support to the proposal. The co-optees will be in the same position as any other members of the Z.O.C. national executive and will hold office in the same way for the duration of the present national executive. Mr. Freeman made it clear that the Zionist parties represented by the co-optees were not amalgamating with the Zionist Organization of Canada, and the United Zionist Council will remain in existence.

ment" by the International Military Tribunal. Mr. Musmanno replied.

He said he could give case histories of men who "refused to kill in cold blood" and were simply transferred to some other duty. Mr. Musmanno testified that Goering had told him in an interview that Eichmann was "all-powerful in extermination of the Jews, that von Ribbentrop 'resented' very much Eichmann's interference in his Ministry of Foreign Affairs"; and that Walter Schellenberg, the Nazi intelligence chief, had disclosed to him that an elite guard court in Berlin once attempted to arraign Eichmann on a charge of "cruelty and corruption."

This attempt to jail Eichmann for "excesses" was frustrated when Kaltenbrunner informed the court it had no jurisdiction because Eichmann was "fulfilling a special mission for the Fuehrer," Mr. Musmanno asserted. The prosecution submitted a copy of the warrant for Eichmann's arrest.

Dr. Servatius was hampered in his cross-examination by the fact that his questions to the witness had to be translated from German into Hebrew and then from Hebrew into English, says the New York Times. This took time and gave Mr. Musmanno, who occasionally looked flustered and excited, opportunity to regain his poise.

Not having read Mr. Musmanno's book on Hitler's last days, Dr. Servatius refrained from asking the question that was in the mind of many spectators. Finally, Judge Landau gently inquired: "Did you mention Eichmann in your book?" "Oh, no, no," cried the witness, "because at that time I wasn't interested in Eichmann. He didn't mean a thing to me then! In the first place, everybody said he was dead and he didn't interest me."

Then later on, of course, he seemed important.

Justice Musmanno said in an interview that he was fully convinced of Israel's moral and legal right to try Eichmann.

"I regard this trial as an extension of the Nuremberg trials, where we established and confirmed the international law that crimes against humanity may be prosecuted in any nation which has the custody of the accused," Justice Musmanno said.

Some lawyers have been disturbed because Israel is trying Eichmann for crimes that were committed far from her sovereign territory. Lawyers have also been uneasy because Eichmann is being tried under a retroactive 1954 law for the punishment of Nazis and Nazi collaborators.

There has been further criticism of Israel for the manner in which she seized Eichmann in Argentina and spirited him secretly to Israel for trial.

"Crimes against humanity are not offenses against any geographical entity or against any territorial community," Justice Musmanno contended. "They are facts committed against a community of people. The Jewish people constitute a community no matter where they reside," the justice declared.

"Thus, it is absurd to say that Israel has no jurisdiction over the crimes chargeable to Eichmann on the theory that Israel was not a state when those acts took place. The Jewish community existed and, of course, continues to exist."

"Moreover, Israel is a successor to the British-mandated Palestine and as such is a continuation of a sovereign people, which was created."

A new classic roof design is featured on five models — the four-window Sedan de Ville, Park Avenue Sedan, Town Sedan, Coupe de Ville and Sixty-Two Coupe.

Altogether, 92 interior options are available. The Sixty-Two series offers two designs in wool and one in vinyl. Bucket seats are available as an option on the Coupe de Ville, Park Avenue Sedan and the four-window Sedan de Ville, as well as on the Sixty-Two Convertible. Bucket seats are also available at no extra cost on the Biarritz Convertible. Leather interiors are also being offered at extra cost on the Coupe de Ville and four-window Sedan de Ville.

Interior of the Sixty Special is highlighted by large African Makori wood panels in all doors and new reading lights on the upper rear quarter panels.

Cadillac also has a new dual braking system. Heart of the system is a dual-type power brake master cylinder with a separate piston and brake fluid reservoir for the two front wheels and for the two rear wheels. From a safety standpoint, this is an ideal system because if one of the hydraulic lines is severed, only one pair of wheel brakes would be out of commission. With the parking brake, which again this year can be employed as an auxiliary brake, the 1962 Cadillac has three separate brake systems in emergency; and features new cornering lights, and tail lights, as Cadillac "firsts".

W. J. C. Urges U.N. Resolution Against Intolerance

The World Jewish Congress urged that the United Nations' General Assembly adopt a resolution calling on the governments of all states to rescind discriminatory laws and "to discourage in every possible way the creation, propagation, and dissemination, in whatever form, of prejudice and intolerance."

Congress has also urged that UNESCO formulate in brief, simple language a summary of the scientific findings on racial theories which would show that many current racial prejudices are mere superstitions. Such a leaflet, the World Jewish Congress contends, would constitute an important first step in insuring that the new generation would be safeguarded against the evil effects of inherited prejudices.

The call for the outlawing of discriminatory laws was made by Dr. Maurice L. Perle, director of the World Jewish Congress Department of International Affairs, at a meeting of a committee of the U.N. Economic and Social Council in Geneva. "Neither military power nor economic progress can in the long run save a civilization undermined by racial prejudice and religious intolerance," Dr. Perle told the Council.

In his call for governmental action on discrimination, Dr. Perle paid tribute to the French delegation at the Commission on Human Rights which had successfully insisted on a reference to anti-Semitism in the preamble of the recommendation. This, the WJC spokesman asserted, gave the recommendation an immediate and concrete application.

Dr. Perle drew attention to the defamatory definitions of certain terms of racial and religious significance enshrined and perpetuated by popular dictionaries in many languages. He instanced such words as "Jew", "Rabbit", "Jesuit", and "Negro" and urged UNESCO to summon an international conference of philologists to consider this problem. Dr. Perle paid tribute to former President Janio Quadros, of Brazil, for instructing the Brazilian education department to revise dictionaries in Brazilian schools in order to eliminate "definitions which hindered the development of better relations between races and religions and fail to keep pace with more enlightened contemporary concepts." President Quadros' action was an historic initiative which recognized that language was always in evolution, and that this evolution could properly be encouraged by intellectual leadership.

Reporting on a recent visit to the larger states in South America, where it had been feared that both overt racist organizations and underground Nazi groups would seize the opportunity of current trials of war criminals to organize anti-Semitic demonstrations and attacks, Dr. Perle said that the resolutions recently adopted by United Nations bodies condemning such manifestations had played a significant part in preventing them. The Congress had helped to give wide publicity to the views of the international community as expressed in these unanimous resolutions. Dr. Perle paid tribute to the governments of South American states which had not only condemned racist manifestations but had taken security measures to prevent them.

Turning to another draft resolution, which was under consideration by the Council, for recommendation to the General Assembly on the proclamation of "Freedom from Prejudice and Discrimination Year", Dr. Perle said that the Congress welcomed this initiative but thought that a mere series of declarations against prejudice in the abstract would not effectively serve the purposes which the governments who had made the proposal had in view. He urged that a committee to formulate a program of concrete proposals be established, and that this committee should include representatives of UNESCO, as well as independent experts. The duration and date of the proposed effort would depend on the practical proposals of such an expert committee.

Dr. Perle urged that the United Nations should call upon the leaders of all great religious and ideological movements to encourage their followers to cultivate a loyalty to their own spiritual traditions and convictions in a way which would avoid all incitement to hatred of others. He asserted that the evil of which he was speaking was common in all parts of the world, and that the mobilization of religious and ideological leadership to combat it might well be an important element in an organized United Nations effort to fight racial prejudice and religious intolerance.

Finally, Dr. Perle urged that such an effort should be marked by the ratification by governments of international instruments like the Convention against Genocide, if they had not already done so. They should also be asked to promote legislation in accordance with their constitutional processes against discrimination. Such administrative and legislative measures would be justified not only by their own merits, but would constitute an important contribution to the education of public opinion in all countries.

tainly in being when the crimes announced in the Eichmann indictment were committed," Justice Musmanno said, reports the New York Times. He said the sole hope of international justice lay in strengthening the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice at The Hague. The World Court should have criminal jurisdiction not only over perpetrators of war crimes but over those who threaten war," he declared.

Fifteen years ago, Justice Michael A. Musmanno, of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court proposed that a world court be set up to try "international criminals" responsible for "crimes against humanity." Had Justice Musmanno's proposal been adopted, the Israelis might not have felt compelled to bring Eichmann to trial in Israel for his role in the execution of 6,000,000 Jews.

Justice Musmanno made his suggestion in 1948, shortly after presiding over the war crimes trial in Nuremberg of twenty-one members of the Nazi Einsatzgruppen. The defendants were charged with responsibility for murdering 2,000,000 Jews during the early years of World War II before the opening of mass annihilation camps.

During the proceedings Justice Musmanno interrupted a witness who testified that the defendants were acting solely under military orders and therefore were guiltless.

"If you received an order to shoot your own parents," Justice Musmanno asked, "would you do it?" The witness hesitated. He was given twenty-four hours to consider his answer. The next day the witness returned to the stand and answered, "No, I wouldn't shoot my parents."

The Justice continued: "Would you shoot somebody else's parents if ordered to do so?" The answer was no.

"Now suppose you received an order to shoot a young Jewish couple who had never done anything wrong and who might some day become parents?" Justice Musmanno asked. The witness could find no answer. He left the stand bewildered.
